

Cho Oyu Expedition

Trip Overview

Cho-Oyu Expedition is a beautiful and easy Expedition above 8000m mountain, Mount Cho-Oyu is situated on the border of Nepal and Tibet, about 20 km to the west of Mt. Everest. Mt. Cho-Oyu stands 8188 m tall and ranks the sixth highest mountain in the world and Cho Oyu was the fifth of the 8000 m peaks to be climbed. Mount Cho-Oyu in Tibetan means the Goddess of Turquoise where Chomo means goddess and Yu means Turquoise and it is also known as 'Mighty Head' or God's Head. Hence, this is regarded as a holy mountain for the locals with religious beliefs. Although there are two routes available to Cho-Oyu, the North West ridge from Tibet is the most popular and also most recommended because the mountain is vertical on the Nepal side but the mountain towards the Tibet side looks quite plain. Despite being an eight thousander, Cho-Oyu is actually not so procedural, this is quite an easy mountain to climb and the mountain possess comparatively low objective risk and has good snow conditions, especially in the fall though in this season there are colder days and progressively more unstable weather. But like with most Himalayan peaks, spring is surely the best time. It is warmer and there is less risk of snow. From the top of Cho-Oyu Mountain, you can have the view of some of the amazing peak plateau alongside with the eye-catching landscape of Lhotse, Everest, Ama Dablam, Nuptse and Chamlang and also more peaks that are located on Khumbu. On October 19, 1954, Cho-Oyu Mountain was first climbed, via the north-west ridge by Herbert Tichy, Joseph Jöchler and Sherpa Pasang Dawa Lama of an Austrian expedition. Cho-Oyu is one of the most beautiful mountains in the world.
