

Pharchamo Peak Climbing

Trip Overview

Pharchamo Peak climbing is situated at an elevation of 6279m, Pharchamo Peak Climbing 6279m is situated in the south of the Tashilabtsa at Rolwaling Himal range. The valley of Rolwaling is natural and remote and has drifted down amid vertical snow capped peaks and because of its location; the local Sherpas here have simply named the valley "the grave". Although the major way in to climbing Pacheramo peak is through Rolwaling valley, the alternative route from the Khumbu side via Namche Bazaar to Thame is used because in 1980s, the former route was closed 1980s because of possible risks the porters suffered while crossing the Tashilabtsa (5,755m). Crossing the Tashi Lapcha pass is challenging, some mountaineering experiences are a must and while climbing Pachermo Peak in Nepal, climbing gears are required since this climbing is pretty snow covered and iced due to the height and the peak's seclusion. It is an attractive mountain and although the ridge may be without much difficulty, sometimes crevasses can cause some difficulty close to the peak. The trek presents an excellent and amazing high alpine valley in the north east of Nepal and as we trek, we get familiar with the mixed cultures of Brahmin villages and then Buddhist cultured villages. The views from the peak are immensely spectacular and very rewarding. On a clear day, looking to the west, we will see the famous mountains of the Khumbu end with Mount Everest to the east, and to the north, there are the bastions of Cho-Oyu and Gyachung Kang. This is one of the best destinations that is certainly worth climbing and the best time to climb the Pachermo Peak is April-May and September - November.
